Search for prospective autologous pediatric and adult stem cell clinical trials. The successful use of bone marrow (BM) and cord blood (CB) from healthy donors in the hematopoietic reconstruction of pediatric and adult patients has led to the discussion of possible scale-up of autologous hematopoietic cell transplantation (AHCB) therapy. The authors set out to review the current data on feasibility, efficacy, and toxicity of autologous hematopoietic cell transplantation in pediatric and adult patients in prospective clinical trials. During the last few years several clinical prospective trials have been conducted. The relevant trials included in this review are up to date. Moreover, the authors present their own experience using BM and PB-derived stem cells in the pediatric and adult patients with hematological malignancies. Furthermore, the authors present an analysis of the current data on the use of BM and PB-derived stem cells in adult patients after different treatments. Finally, the authors discuss possible obstacles encountered in the clinical use of AHCB in the pediatric and adult patients. BM and PB-derived stem cell therapy is an effective and well tolerated treatment for the adult and pediatric patients with hematological malignancies. Autologous hematopoietic cell transplantation is associated with low morbidity and mortality rates. However, for high-dose chemotherapy patients there is no clear data on the optimum time of transplantation. A growing amount of data supports the use of BM cells as an alternative to PB cells. The safety of stem cell transplantation in the older patients with leukemia is not yet well defined, while the data regarding safety in the patients treated for AML in first remission is promising.Q: SQL Sum() returns wrong sum I am using SUM() in SQL Server 2005.
